

Insights from The Bullet Journal Method by Ryder Carroll

“The Bullet Journal Method is for anyone struggling to find their place in the digital age. It will help you get organized by providing simple tools and techniques that can inject clarity, direction, and focus into your days.”
- Ryder Carroll

The Bullet Journal method converts an old-fashioned notebook into a combination planner, notebook, and journal.

Key Components of the Bullet Journal Method

Index

The Index is a four-page dynamic table of contents that lives at the front of your Bullet Journal and contains the location of the Future Log, Monthly Logs, special lists (reading list, food log, etc.), and projects.

“The Index provides an easy way to find your thoughts days, months, or years after entrusting them to your notebook.” - Ryder Carroll

Future Log

The Future Log is a four-page section (following the Index), where you store tasks and events you can't complete in the current month (each page contains three months of the year).

“Think of the Future Log as a queue, each item eagerly waiting for its month to arrive. When you're setting up a new Monthly Log (see below), be sure to scan your Future Log for any items in the queue that are ready now.” - Ryder Carroll

Monthly Logs

At the beginning of every month, create a new Monthly Log. Each Monthly Log is two pages long. The first page contains a quick calendar used to capture key milestones, event dates, and work deadlines. The second page contains a task list. If you plan to complete a task before the end of the month, but cannot complete that task today or tomorrow, put it in your current Monthly Log task list.

Daily Log

At the beginning of each day, create a new Daily Log. The Daily Log is where you capture all thoughts during the day (see 'Rapid Logging' section).

“The Daily Log is there to prevent us from having to waste time thinking about where to write things down. It's a catchall, designed to hold our thoughts until we're ready to sort them out.” - Ryder Carroll

Rapid Logging

The Bullet Journal maintains a clean and minimal look by leveraging a series of symbols and short-form notation to enter information.

Short-form notation example:

- Rick: email re: XYZ Project Status

Migrating

At the end of the day, you either delete unfinished items on your Daily Log by crossing them out, or you rewrite unfinished items in either tomorrow's Daily Log (complete tomorrow), the current Monthly Log (complete later this month), or Future Log (complete later this year – include specific date).

“During Migration, we transfer content from one place in our Bullet Journal to another by rewriting it. This may seem like a lot of effort, but it serves a critical purpose: It weeds out distractions... It helps you identify and focus on what is meaningful by stripping away what is meaningless.” - Ryder Carroll
